Description

The World Bank (USA) is part of an international financial agency that makes loans and grants to governments in low- and middle-income countries to fund capital projects. The United States was a driving force behind the founding of the World Bank in 1944 and it is still the World Bank's largest shareholder today.

The United States contributes to tackling critical international development concerns through the World Bank Group and has a long history of generously supporting the objectives of the World Bank Group and has been a champion of the International Development Association (IDA) which provides low-interest loans and grants to the world's poorest countries. The key U.S. priorities at the World Bank include a multilateral health and economic response to COVID-19, debt sustainability and transparency, promoting governance and fighting corruption, ending energy poverty and supporting a strong emphasis on accountability, transparency and development impact.

Due Diligence Tools

In 2010, five multilateral donors, the World Bank, Inter-American Development Bank, African Development Bank, European Bank for Reconstruction and Development, and the Asian Development Bank, signed an agreement on the mutual enforcement of debarments. This agreement allows donors to share information on debarred companies and individuals, often resulting in cross-debarment by other donors.

- ✓ If a donor is notified of an allegation of corruption, fraud, or coercive or collusive practices by a firm or individual involved with one of its projects, the donor will investigate the allegation.

- ✓ If the allegation of misconduct is confirmed, the donor will move to debar the individual and/or company.
- ✓ Any individual or company debarred by the donor will be prohibited from bidding for all projects financed by the said donor for the duration of the debarment.
- ✓ The donor may choose to refer their findings to the relevant judicial authorities for potential prosecution.
